EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The 2018 University Climate Survey was created after reviewing data gathered from the 2016 University Climate Survey and the follow-up focus groups and interviews. The Survey was created in order to gauge faculty, staff, and student perceptions regarding organizational issues at Louisiana Tech University. More specifically, the purpose of this University Survey project was to:

- solicit feedback from the Louisiana Tech community regarding the climate, culture, operation, and strategic direction of the University.
- make data-driven decisions about whether and how to address issues and to celebrate strengths.
- act on feedback in ways that advance the University's mission, values, and long-term strategies.
- foster alignment across stakeholder groups that match the University's strategic direction and result in action plans across parties.

The following is a brief overview of the survey structure:

- In total, 853 participants completed the survey.
 - 205 faculty (a response rate of 57.6%), 186 staff (a response rate of 16.7% for full-time staff), and 462 students (a response rate of 3.6%)
- The survey consisted of 136 to 152 items, varying based on the respondent's group membership.
- Respondents rated their perceptions concerning 30 - 33 areas.
- Results are reported at the college and division levels to ensure confidentiality for all participants.

Strategy-Matrix Guide

The strategy matrix below was developed in order to guide the prioritization of issues at Louisiana Tech based on the results of the survey. Performance ratings of low, moderate, and high were based on mean scores for all groups. Importance ratings for 32 of the 33 areas were derived from their correlations with job satisfaction (the 33rd area). Three areas (Commitment, Change Readiness, and Turnover) are outcomes, not antecedents, of job satisfaction and were thus excluded from the strategy matrix. While all nine of the cells in the matrix provide information, we focus our attention on the four cells highlighted below because of their importance relative to the other cells.

Priority 1 boxes represent primary weaknesses; these are categories that had low scores, but a strong relationship with satisfaction. There were no categories in this year's survey which fell into Priority 1.

Priority 2 boxes represent possible weaknesses; categories with a strong relationship with satisfaction, but a moderate performance score. Our advice is to try to improve these categories. Since there were no primary weaknesses in this year's survey, this category should be the primary focus of efforts for improvement.

Priority 3 boxes represent secondary weaknesses; these are categories that have a moderate relationship with satisfaction, but low performance. Our advice is to consider addressing these categories; while their relationship with satisfaction isn't as strong as those in Priority 1, 2, or 4, their low performance scores indicate that there is room for improvement.

Priority 4 boxes represent Louisiana Tech's primary strengths, with high scores and strong relationships to satisfaction; our advice is to maintain and leverage these.

		PERFORMANCE
		Low	Moderate	High
IMPORTANCE	High	Priority 1 Primary Weakness: Definitely Address	Priority 2 Possible Weakness: Try to Improve	Priority 4 Primary Strength: Maintain and Leverage
	Moderate	Priority 3 Secondary Weakness: Consider Addressing	No Action	Maintain but Manage Costs
	Low	Ignore, Drop, and/or Phase Out	Evaluate to Consider Dropping	Potential to Cut Costs

2018 Strategy Matrix

Overall, 9 of the 29 areas were rated as high-performing areas by the respondents. Of the remaining constructs, 16 were rated as areas of moderate performance, while 4 were identified as areas of low performance.

- Priority 1: Based on the 2018 data, no area was determined to be a primary weakness, low performing with high importance.
- Priority 2: Recognition, voice, fairness/justice, recruitment, benefits, work environment, work-life balance, communication, and infrastructure were the nine areas rated as highly important, but having moderate performance.
- Priority 3: Compensation and burnout were rated as having low performance and were considered moderately important.
- Priority 4: Of the 9 high-performing areas, value alignment, productivity, role clarity, engagement, student commitment, and motivation were considered to be highly important to survey-takers and were considered University strengths.

		PERFORMANCE
		Low	Moderate	High
IMPORTANCE	High		Recognition Voice Fairness/Justice Recruitment Benefits Work Environment Work-life Balance Communication Infrastructure	Value Alignment Productivity Role Clarity Engagement Student Commitment Motivation
	Moderate	Compensation Burnout	Innovation Tenure & Promotion Collaboration Training Power Distance	Peer Conflict Organizational Structure Autonomy
	Low	Process Perceptions Workforce	Advising Workload

*Each area/topic is presented in order of rated importance within each cell.

Priority 1: Primary Weakness

High Importance, Low Performance; Definitely Address

- Currently none of these constructs fall under this category.

Priority 2: Possible Weaknesses

High Importance, Moderate Performance; Try to Improve

Recognition

Faculty, staff, and students seemed to have mixed feelings about the extent to which the University recognizes them.

Voice

Faculty, staff, and students reported that while they felt as if their suggestions and feedback were being heard, they were not being utilized.

Fairness/Justice

While faculty and staff felt that though their interactions with supervisors were satisfactory, the way in which rewards are distributed through the University was less satisfactory. Students reported being treated fairly, although issues with bias and their lack of a role in influencing policies were seen as weaknesses.

Recruitment

Faculty, staff, and students were mostly satisfied with the quality of the faculty, staff, and students that the University and that their respective colleges recruited, but did not believe that the University hired new employees quickly enough. Additionally, faculty and students did not feel that the University offered incentives that were valuable enough to attract new faculty members.

Benefits

While staff reported satisfaction with their benefits, faculty were divided on their opinions, with almost as many indicating dissatisfaction as satisfaction. Students were not asked questions concerning benefits.

Work Environment

- Faculty, staff, and students were satisfied with their work environment, indicating that it was suitable for their work requirements and that it encouraged them to be more productive, although students felt as if their environment was somewhat stressful.
- Faculty felt that the University did not show much care to avoid incorporating religion into events/meetings and that it could improve the level of support that it provided for individuals who identify as LGBTQ. Staff were neutral in this regard.

Work-life Balance

- Faculty and staff were satisfied with their work-life balance and agreed that they were able to satisfy both work and personal commitments. Students felt that while they could fulfill their responsibilities, obligations outside of school would disrupt their work at school, and vice-versa.

Communication

- Faculty, staff, and students largely concurred that communication with supervisors and senior leadership was adequate. However, faculty and staff felt that communication between colleges at the University could benefit from improvement.

Infrastructure

- Faculty, staff, and students were satisfied with the physical environment at Louisiana Tech and the plans currently in place to improve the infrastructure but would like to have technology more readily available and incorporated into daily processes.

Priority 3: Secondary Weaknesses

Moderate Importance, Low Performance; Consider Addressing

Compensation

Faculty and staff were dissatisfied with the fairness associated with and the amount of their compensation. Students were not asked questions regarding compensation.

Burnout

- Faculty and students indicated that they were experiencing burnout, with the majority indicating being emotionally exhausted at the end of the workday. Staff opinions were mixed.

Priority 4: Primary Strengths

High Importance, High Performance; Maintain and Leverage

Value Alignment

- Faculty, staff, and students were satisfied with value alignment, indicating that they believe in the values of the University and that they have values that align with those of the University.

Productivity

- Faculty, staff, and students felt that their roles gave them the opportunity to produce high-quality work and to show how capable they are.

Role Clarity

- Faculty, staff, and students were satisfied with the clarity of expectations related to their responsibilities, and indicated that they knew what they had to do to succeed in their positions at Louisiana Tech.

Engagement

- Faculty, staff, and students at the University were engaged, with the majority indicating enthusiasm about their respective responsibilities, as well as the meaningfulness and challenge in their roles.

Student Commitment

- Faculty, staff, and students believed that students at Louisiana Tech are committed to success and proud to be at the University.

Motivation

- Faculty and staff were motivated regarding their work, indicating ease in starting their workday and putting forth effort throughout the day. Students had evenly-divided perspectives regarding their satisfaction with their schoolwork motivation.

INTRODUCTION

Purpose

The purpose of this report is to identify and address organizational issues, celebrate strengths, and advance Louisiana Tech's mission and strategic goals.

Background

In October of 2015, the AROS team was invited by University Senate leaders to discuss the possibility of assisting them in the development of a University survey. After meeting with Drs. Les Guice and Terry McConathy, the AROS team agreed to create a tailored survey aimed at gauging the climate, operation, and alignment of proceedings with strategic objectives of Louisiana Tech University.

In February of 2016, the University Climate Survey was administered to faculty, staff, and students. The data from the Survey were analyzed and a report was given out to the University family. Follow-up interviews and focus groups were conducted in order to gain more insight into the survey responses.

The information gathered in the focus groups and interviews guided revisions of the 2016 University Climate Survey in order to create the 2018 University Climate Survey. While the majority of items from the 2016 Survey were kept, some edits were made in order to improve clarity and conveyance, as well as to remove any items deemed unnecessary.

Organizational Diagram

The following diagram was created by the AROS team to depict the ten unit levels of Louisiana Tech University to be used for analyses. Unit levels were chosen based primarily on the existing University structure.

RESEARCH FINDINGS

Construct Definitions

The following definitions were used for the constructs involved in the current study and are listed in the order in which they were presented in the survey – which was in turn based on their location in our theoretical model.

- Infrastructure: The physical facilities (e.g., buildings, classrooms) and technological equipment available to faculty, staff, and students at the University.
- Organizational Structure: The arrangement of authority, communication, and duties within the University that determines how roles and responsibilities are assigned and coordinated.
- Student Commitment: The level of devotion to classwork and success of students at the University.
- Value Alignment: The alignment between the values of the University and those of its faculty, staff, and students.
- Workforce: The quality and quantity of employees at the University.
- Workload: The amount of work necessary for faculty, staff, and students to fulfill their role requirements and be successful.
- Innovation: The availability of opportunities to come up with new methods or creative ideas.
- Recruitment: The processes through which faculty, staff, and students are sought out and encouraged to join the University.
- Advising: The process through which faculty and staff assist students in determining the classes needed to complete their degree, in registering for classes, and in helping them make decisions about their careers.
- Process Perceptions: The thoughts and feelings that faculty, staff, and students have about the processes through which they accomplish administrative tasks at the University.
- Tenure & Promotion: Perceptions of fairness and appropriateness regarding the processes through which individuals apply for and achieve tenure and promotion.
- Training: Systems in place to give members of the University the knowledge and skills that they need to succeed.
- Autonomy: The chance to make decisions about how one does one's work.
- Collaboration: Opportunities and willingness to share ideas and work together with others at the University.
- Communication: The quality and desirability of format and frequency of information exchange - with peers and with University leadership.
- Peer Conflict: The civility of interactions with fellow University members and the degree to which disagreements are resolved positively.
- Fairness/Justice: Consistency and equitability of treatment - in distribution of rewards, execution of processes, and interpersonal interactions.
- Power Distance: The perceived gap of status between an individual and the individuals higher up in the University - and the fear associated with failing to respect that gap.
- Productivity: The opportunity to do high-quality work that showcases an individual's capabilities.

- Role Clarity: Certainty of one's responsibilities - and for what one is not responsible - at the University.
- Voice: The perception that one can state one's opinion freely and have that opinion be heard and considered by the University.
- Work Environment: The psychological experience of the physical and interpersonal context in which one spends time at the University and the impact of that on one's well-being.
- Benefits: Non-salary offerings that individuals receive as a function of being employed by the University.
- Compensation: Monetary payment that employees receive for their work at the University.
- Recognition: The celebration of one's accomplishments by other members of the University.
- Burnout: Psychological strain resulting from a prolonged response to chronic job stressors that exceed an individual's ability to cope.
- Engagement: A work-related psychological state that includes high levels of energy and enthusiasm with one's job.
- Motivation: Taken in whole, the conditions responsible for variations in an employee's persistence, quality, and direction of organizational behavior.
- Work-life Balance: The extent to which work experiences affect non-work aspects, and vice-versa, of an employee's life.
- Commitment: An individual's psychological attachment to the University, divided into three sources – deep feelings for the University, a sense of obligation to the University, and costs associated with leaving the University.
- Job Satisfaction: One's attitudes resulting from the evaluation of one's job.
- Change Readiness: One's beliefs that changes are necessary, that the changes proposed are the best solutions, that the changes would be successful and would be supported by the leadership of the University, and that the changes would be personally beneficial to the individual.
- Turnover: The intentions that employees have regarding staying with the University.

Performance Ratings

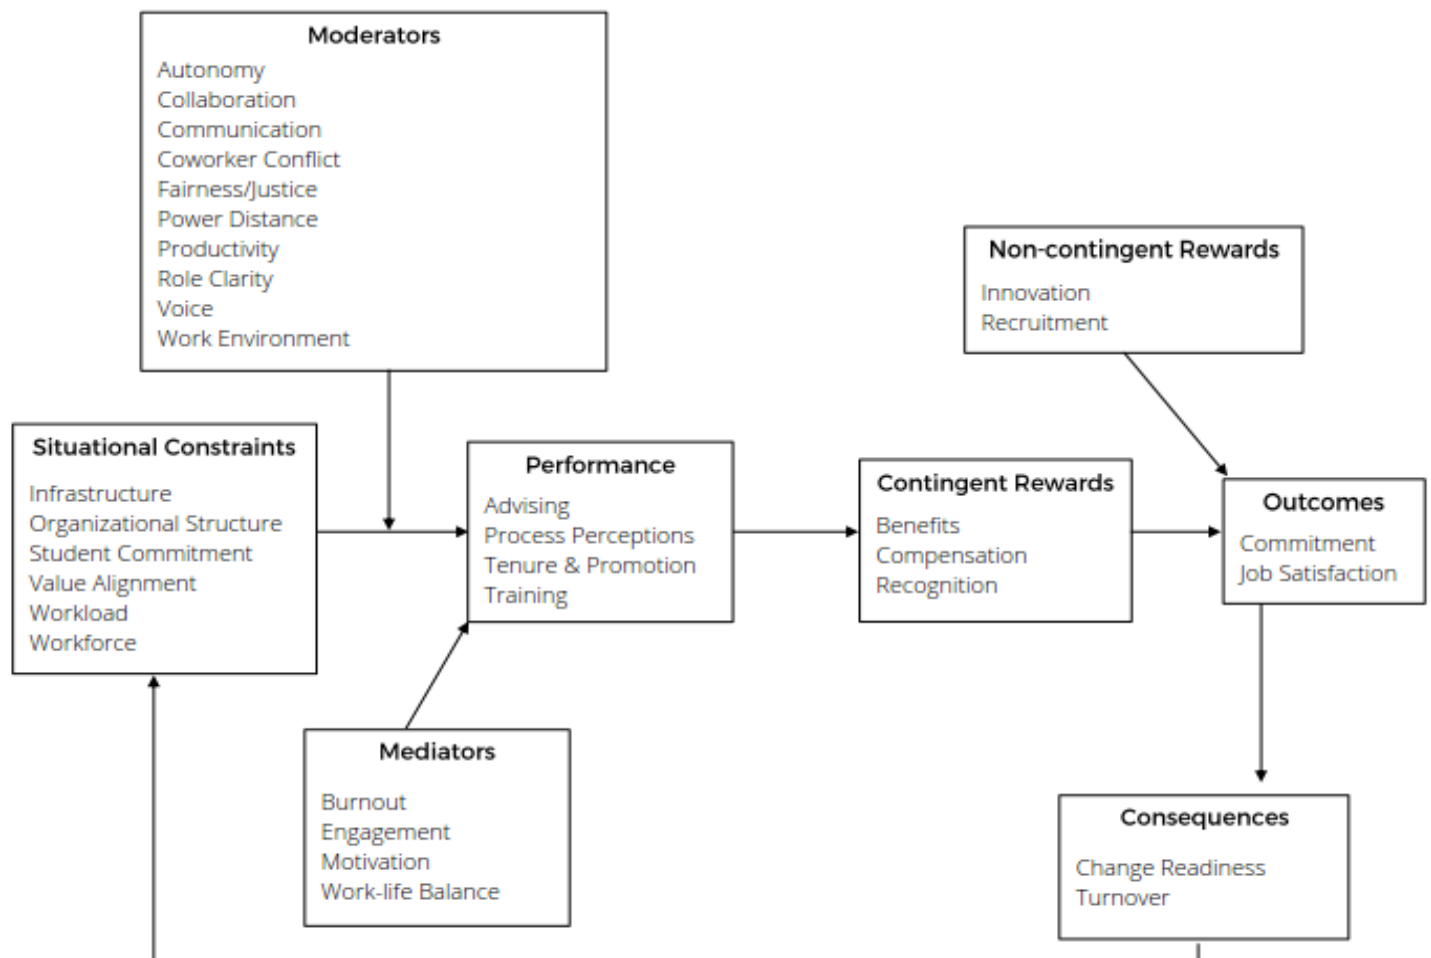

The table below summarizes the performance ratings for each of the three respondent groups in the current survey. Given all of the possible segmentations, the table assists in understanding the complexity of the survey results and what additional analyses were conducted.

METHODOLOGY

Theoretical Model

The model of organizational functioning we used is based on a framework of workplace motivation known as the High Performance Cycle (HPC; Locke & Latham, 1990). According to the HPC, employee motivation is affected by specific challenges and demands. Job performance leads to rewards for the individual that further lead to job satisfaction and organizational commitment. Situational constraints can play a role in this relationship by influencing employees' ability to successfully perform their job duties. Additionally, the relationship may be explained by mediators (constructs that sit between ultimate causes and ultimate effects in a causal chain; e.g., engagement) or the strength or direction of the relationship may be impacted by moderators (boundary conditions that modify the strength of causal relationships; e.g., fairness/justice).

Initial Discussions

Due to the University's continued growth and change, University stakeholders expressed interest in the deployment of a survey to gather information about how these changes affect faculty, staff, and students at Louisiana Tech. AROS was contracted to create and oversee the deployment of a University-wide survey. The goal was to gather feedback from the faculty, staff, and students, and to use this information to address key issues, celebrate strengths, and advance the University's mission and goals.

AROS is associated with Louisiana Tech University's Industrial-Organizational Psychology doctoral program and projects are led by doctoral students with faculty oversight. AROS applies the principles of Industrial-Organizational psychology to produce custom, cost-effective solutions for organizations. AROS has assisted multinational and Fortune 500 companies in addressing a wide variety of organizational issues. Services include data cleaning, processing, and coding; custom qualitative and quantitative research services; personnel selection; performance-appraisal-system design and deployment; and organizational development within the areas of team building, leadership development, and process consultation. With dual core competencies in applied psychology and research methods, AROS is able to provide a data-driven approach to addressing organizational concerns, in which they are also able to guide organizational-development initiatives to help facilitate change and resolution of concerns.

Discovery Process

The current survey was meant to address topics relevant to this University in particular. For this reason, before survey items could be written, information had to be gathered about the issues and concerns unique to Louisiana Tech's faculty, staff, and students. The information-gathering process began with one-on-one interviews with key University stakeholders (deans and vice presidents) and continued with focus groups composed of a representative cross-section of faculty, staff, and students.

Survey Development

Development of the initial survey began with the extraction of themes from information gathered during interviews with the deans and vice presidents, and also information collected during focus groups with faculty, staff, and students. A thorough and comprehensive review of the scientific literature was conducted to gather best practices that would guide the writing of survey items. Survey item pools were then written for each of the extracted themes and intended target audiences (faculty, staff, and students). The majority of items were kept from the 2016 Survey, with some additions or edits for clarity, as well as some deletions if the item was deemed unnecessary. The item pool was reviewed for consistency in item wording to ensure the items could be compared across the three target groups. The survey was then programmed into the SurveyMonkey survey-deployment suite and pilot tested to ensure that survey duration was within intended limits and that survey flow operated as intended. An e-mail with the appropriate link was sent to members of each target audience.

Reliability Analysis

Given the breadth of topics covered in the survey, the constituent components (subdimensions) of most constructs were assessed using very few items. Thus, in the majority of cases internal-consistency-reliability analyses were inappropriate to conduct. It may be appropriate to expand instruments to focus in on key drivers at the University; following such expansion, the use of reliability analyses may be instituted.

Data Analysis

Once survey deployment was complete, the data were analyzed. Any incomplete responses were removed and the dataset was divided by target audience (faculty, staff, and students). Next, means and percentages were calculated for each survey item within target audiences. The dataset was then divided so that comparisons across subunits (e.g., colleges, divisions) could be made. In addition to means and percentages for each survey item within the subunit, the mean of the subunit (e.g., College of Education) was compared to the mean for all other groups (i.e., the mean for all data but College of Education); this information was included in only the particular subunit reports. Subunits were only included in the report when they had 10 or more responses to preserve confidentiality, therefore, some units are missing. In most circumstances, percentages, means, and mean differences were rounded to the nearest tenth. When sample sizes were equal to or below 10, however, percentages were rounded to the nearest whole number. Additionally, demographic and construct-priority data were extracted on a target-audience basis. Finally, metrics of general performance area were assessed at the construct level by examining mean responses within each construct for each target audience; indices of complexity were assessed based on the variability of responses within each construct for each target audience.

Strategy Matrix Rationale

The strategy matrix was developed by crossing performance ratings with derived importance ratings. Scores for each construct/area were averaged across the three target groups and were used to place constructs into low-, moderate-, and high-performance groups. The importance ratings were created by calculating bivariate correlation coefficients between each construct and job satisfaction (e.g., voice and job satisfaction). Although correlation coefficients do not reveal information about causal links, they can provide information about the nature and strength of the relationship between variables. Importance ratings were categorized as low, moderate, and high based on Cohen's (1977) guidelines. The strategy matrix provides a visual representation of areas where the University is performing well and that it should continue to maintain and leverage, areas of poor performance that should be addressed through organizational initiatives, and areas that the University should continue to evaluate in the future.

Faculty Results

The following section of the report details the specific results in regards to faculty responses. Faculty were operationally defined as Louisiana Tech employees with teaching responsibilities. A total of 205 Louisiana Tech faculty members participated in the survey. The following table describes the response rates of the 205 faculty members by key demographics.

	LA Tech	Responders	Response Rate
Overall	356*	205	57.6%

*Figures based on 2016 Fact Book provided by Office of Institutional Research (i.e., IPEDS Classification)

PNTA = Prefer Not to Answer; CANS = College of Applied & Natural Sciences; COE = College of Education; COB = College of Business; COES = College of Engineering & Science; COLA = College of Liberal Arts

Note: Not all percentages in the following tables will add up to 100% due to rounding. Constructs are presented in the order in which they appeared on the survey.

For detailed faculty results, please refer to page 86 in the Appendix.

Infrastructure

Overall, faculty were satisfied with the physical environment at Louisiana Tech and the plans currently in place to improve the infrastructure, they but would like to have technology more readily available.

	Net Agree
I am satisfied with the technology available to employees on campus.	51%
I am satisfied with the plan the University has in place to improve buildings on campus.	46%
I am satisfied with the quality of the common areas on campus.	63%
The University could benefit from incorporating more efficient technology into daily processes.	87%
I am satisfied with the plan the University has in place to provide additional parking.	56%

Faculty members were satisfied with the current infrastructure or the plans for improving the current infrastructure. In regard to the plan to improve parking, respondents indicated that they were generally satisfied, but a large proportion indicated neutral feelings. Because respondents were not given an option to indicate a lack of knowledge of the plan, responses may be an indication of respondents’ being unaware of the proposed plan. A closer look revealed that although the majority of respondents were satisfied with the technology available to employees on campus, a stronger majority indicated that the University could benefit from incorporating more efficient technology into daily processes.

Organizational Structure Overall, faculty members were satisfied with the organizational structure of the University including where their respective college/department is housed and the number of people to whom they report.

	Net Agree
It is clear to me who I am supposed to report to.	92%
My primary academic department belongs in the college in which it is placed.	89%
I am satisfied with the way that Louisiana Tech's colleges and departments are structured.	69%
Reorganizing the structure of the University would be beneficial.	40%
I report to too many people.	8%

Faculty members strongly agreed that they understood to whom they were supposed to report and that their academic department was housed where it should be. The majority of faculty members did not have a strong opinion as to whether reorganizing the University structure would be beneficial. This may be due to the vague nature of the question; respondents may have been unsure of what exactly a restructuring of the organization would look like.

Student Commitment Faculty members believed students at Louisiana Tech to be committed to success and proud to be at the University.

	Net Agree
The students at Louisiana Tech are committed to success.	80%
The students at Louisiana Tech are proud to be here.	88%

Value Alignment

Overall, faculty members were satisfied with value alignment indicating that they believe in the values of the University and have values that align with those of the University.

	Net Agree
I believe in the values of Louisiana Tech.	81%
My personal values align with Louisiana Tech's 2020 mission and vision.	76%

Workforce

Overall, faculty members overwhelmingly agreed that the University needs improvement in the workforce, indicating a need for additional faculty and staff.

	Net Agree
Louisiana Tech could benefit from adding additional faculty members.	96%
Staff at the University have to take on additional work because the University is inadequately staffed.	86%

Workload

Overall, faculty members were satisfied with the number of students they advise, the number of students in their classrooms, and the number of courses they teach. They were less satisfied with the resources offered by the University to help balance this workload.

	Net Agree
I am satisfied with the number of students that I am assigned to advise.	60%
I am satisfied with the number of courses that I am assigned to teach each quarter.	72%
I oftentimes find myself drowning in work.	82%
The University provides the resources and support necessary for me to balance all that is expected of me.	34%
I am satisfied with the number of students in the classes I teach.	67%
I am expected to fulfill too many roles at the same time.	64%
My workweek schedule is not long enough to complete the tasks I need to finish.	65%

A notable number of respondents indicated the workweek is not long enough for them to complete all the tasks they need to finish and that they oftentimes find themselves drowning in work. Additionally, responses indicated that some faculty members felt as though they were expected to fulfill too many roles. Although the majority of respondents agreed that they fulfill too many roles, a notable percentage of faculty members answered in the opposite direction. It may be that a particular college (or several colleges) divides the workload in a way that leads to satisfaction among faculty members with the number of roles they are expected to fulfill. There was a large discrepancy in answers about the resources and support provided by the University to help faculty members balance their workload; these divergent viewpoints may be a result of different individual experiences within the University.

Innovation

Overall, faculty members were satisfied with their opportunities to be innovative at Louisiana Tech.

	Net Agree
I have the opportunity to be innovative at Louisiana Tech.	71%
The University is making efforts to keep up with the changing world.	61%
The University is stuck in the past.	49%

Recruitment

Faculty members were mostly satisfied with the quality of the faculty members at the University, but a large majority do not believe the University hires new employees fast enough. Additionally, they did not feel that the University offers incentives valuable enough to attract new faculty members. The overwhelming majority agreed with the increased focus on growing the student body and believed that the University does a good job recruiting high-quality students.

	Net Agree
The University does a good job of recruiting high-quality faculty members.	51%
The University does a good job of recruiting high-quality staff members.	44%
The University does a good job of recruiting high-quality students.	73%
Louisiana Tech hires new employees in a timely manner.	13%
I agree with the increased focus that has been placed on growing the student body through recruitment.	74%
Louisiana Tech offers good incentives to attract high-quality employees to the University.	22%

Advising

Overall, faculty members were satisfied with the advising model and their ability to connect with advisees but were relatively neutral when asked if they would like to spend more time with their advisees.

	Net Agree
I am happy with the academic-advising model that we use.	52%
I would prefer to spend more time with each of my academic advisees.	25%
I connect with my academic advisees on a personal level.	73%

Faculty at the University were divided when it came to academic advising. The majority of respondents indicated satisfaction with the academic-advising model used at the University. Additionally, the majority of respondents indicated that they connect with their advisees on a personal level; however, there were more negative ratings in regard to whether faculty members would like to spend more time with their advisees.

Process Perceptions

Overall, faculty members are dissatisfied with the administrative processes at Louisiana Tech and believe they could be better streamlined for efficiency. They indicated that many of the processes make it difficult to do a good job and require them to spend too much work time doing paperwork.

	Net Agree
I spend too much work time doing paperwork.	66%
I am satisfied with the processes that I have to follow as a faculty member at Louisiana Tech.	37%
The processes that I complete to, for example, receive travel authorization are reasonable.	47%
I need to better understand the processes of other colleges at Louisiana Tech.	32%
Many of the University’s rules and procedures make it difficult to do a good job.	49%

Although the majority of faculty members at the University were dissatisfied with the processes they have to follow, a noticeable percentage of respondents answered in the opposite direction, indicating they were satisfied with such processes. Further comparisons may reveal issues regarding communication about how such processes should be accomplished and/or why such processes are needed. Faculty members indicated that they spend too much time doing paperwork, however they also indicated that some processes they must follow are reasonable. Faculty did not feel as though they needed to better understand the processes of other colleges.

Tenure and Promotion

Overall, faculty members were relatively neutral in their opinions regarding the tenure and promotion process being well organized. A larger majority indicated that the promotion process is fair and that the criteria are clearly defined.

	Net Agree
The tenure process is efficient and well-organized.	54%
The promotion process is fair.	52%
The criteria for achieving promotion are clearly defined.	52%

Training

Overall, faculty members were satisfied with the new processes and improving knowledge and skills. There was less agreement about the resources available for attending academic meetings/conferences and the on-boarding training.

	Net Agree
The University encourages faculty members to participate in continuing education.	46%
The University provides resources for me to improve my knowledge and skills.	41%
When I first joined the University, I was satisfied with the on-boarding training I received.	48%
I have received sufficient training to do my job.	61%
When new processes are put into place, the University offers the relevant training for employees.	56%

Although the majority of faculty members indicated that they received sufficient training when they first joined the University, a small percentage of respondents did not feel that they received sufficient on-board training. Further comparisons may reveal that a particular college (or several colleges) needs improvement in the on-board training they provide new employees. Even though the majority of faculty members indicated they have received sufficient training to do their job, opinions in regard to continuing education and resources to improve knowledge and skills were less positive. However, there were several notable discrepancies on these three items.

Autonomy Overall, faculty members were overwhelmingly satisfied with their level of autonomy. Faculty members were satisfied with the freedom they had in choosing the content they teach in, and the way in which they perform their job.

	Net Agree
I have freedom in choosing the content I teach in my academic courses.	88%
I can control how and when I perform my job.	75%

Collaboration Overall, faculty members were satisfied with the level of collaboration at the University, but there was less agreement about the sharing of information across colleges.

	Net Agree
Faculty across colleges at the University share information and ideas with one another.	56%
There are opportunities for collaboration within the University.	74%

Communication

Faculty felt that communication with supervisors and senior leadership was appropriate. Communication between colleges at the University demonstrated lower net agreement compared to other levels.

	Net Agree
The goals and objectives of the University are clearly communicated to the faculty.	58%
I am satisfied with the level of communication between colleges at the University.	33%
I am satisfied with the level of communication between departments at the University.	41%
I am satisfied with University leadership's availability to discuss issues and concerns with faculty.	51%
I receive feedback from my supervisor about the quality of my work.	81%
Communication via e-mail is too burdensome.	17%
Communication from senior leadership to faculty is efficient.	50%
Communication regarding policies and procedures is excessive at Louisiana Tech.	42%

Overall, opinions about communication at the University were positive. The majority of faculty members were satisfied with the feedback they received from their supervisors, felt that the University leadership is available to discuss concerns with faculty members, and believed that communication at the University is efficient. Although the majority of faculty members felt that the goals and objectives of the University are clearly communicated, a small percentage of respondents indicated disagreement on this item. While the majority of faculty members expressed dissatisfaction with the level of communication between colleges, many felt as though it was acceptable. Additionally, there were discrepancies among responses in regard to the communication of policies and procedures. While some respondents felt that the communication of such topics was excessive, others did not. The majority felt that e-mail was a good form of communication.

Students were largely positive about their psychological experience of the environment in which they studied at the University – they considered it moderately supportive to people of different backgrounds and walks of life. They were more divided in their opinions – leaning overall in a negative direction – about the stress that they experience in that environment, indicating that the environment causes them more stress than necessary.

Recognition

Though this is an area for growth, students felt that the University recognizes their work and values them.

	Net Agree
I am valued by the University.	60%
The work I do for the University is adequately recognized.	65%
I receive sufficient recognition for the good work that I do at Louisiana Tech.	60%

Overall, students were neutral to moderately positive about the extent to which the University recognizes them for their work and values them as students. The great majority of responses fell on the neutral-to-positive end of the response scale, but this by no means constituted resounding positivity.

Burnout

Most students were exhausted as a result of the amount of work, likely at school and outside of school, that they do.

	Net Agree
I am emotionally exhausted at the end of the school day.	71%
I am worn down by the amount of work that I have to do in my role as a student.	70%

	Net Agree
I plan to stay at Louisiana Tech until I graduate.	95%
I intend to remain a student at Louisiana Tech for the rest of my academic career.	83%

FUTURE DIRECTIONS

Organizational Development

Focusing on the purpose of the University-climate survey at Louisiana Tech, survey results aid the University in three ways: (1) revealing the perceptions held by the faculty, staff, and students; (2) allowing for some unit-level comparisons of faculty, staff, and student responses; and, most importantly, (3) making possible discussions of potential options for data-driven organizational development. Additionally, the results from this survey allow for comparisons of attitudes at the University over time. The survey should be given as a recurring measure to gain a “pulse” on faculty, staff, and student perspectives as they change following organizational interventions and as a result of the passage of time. Color coded boxes have been added to the detailed survey results to help aid interpretation of the changes of opinions that have taken place between the 2016 and 2018 surveys. Green boxes, and their corresponding numbers, represent an increase in the average from the 2016 survey. Red boxes, and their corresponding numbers, represent a decrease in the average from the 2016 survey. Results presented in this report will hopefully lead to discussions with key stakeholders that can provide solutions to some organizational problems, as well as to leverage existing strengths to develop Louisiana Tech to be even better than it is today.

Given the current budgetary crisis in education within the state of Louisiana, the survey results presented can be used in the most cost-effective ways to improve and develop Louisiana Tech, at little to no cost to the University. The report and the initial comments below are provided as discussion points for future conversations with Drs. McConathy and Guice regarding optimal change foci.

Using Systems Theory and the Open Systems Approach (Katz & Kahn, 1978), it can be acknowledged that large-group interventions must be carefully planned, as a change in one system may affect the whole system in unexpected ways. With that being said, discussions should begin based on (1) priority of the need for that change, (2) effectiveness of that change, given the effort required to affect it, and (3) the potential implications that that change might have on other systems within the University.

As indicated on page 2, efforts should be focused on improving areas in Priority 2 of the strategy matrix. While no areas were considered Priority 1, it is important to continue leveraging the strengths of the University while also acknowledging the areas in need of improvement.

Improvements & Adjustments

Changes were made from the 2016 to 2018 University Climate Survey, including adjustments of item wording in the survey to improve clarity and conveyance. After reviewing the 2016 University Climate Survey and evaluating the data gathered in the follow-up interviews and focus groups, it was clear that some foci deserved additional investigation while others were comfortably clear and, therefore, assessed using fewer items in the 2018 survey. Based on the organizational-development efforts made after the 2016 University Climate Survey, additional items were used to gauge the results of the change that has occurred. Overall, the University Climate Survey maintained and will continue to maintain its overall structure, with adjustments to improve the future surveys and give more opportunity for comparison among groups as well as for longitudinal comparisons across years of administration.

Data Guide

Construct Label: This is the name of the construct currently under investigation. A full list of constructs and their definitions can be found on page 10.

Scoring Scale: These columns describe how the respondents rated each item, based on a scale from 1 (Strongly Disagree; SD) to 7 (Strongly Agree; SA).

Mean: This number represents the average score for a question.

Infrastructure

	SD	D	SWD	N	SWA	A	SA	Mean	'16-'18 Change
I am satisfied with the technology available to employees on campus.	11.6%	15.7%	16.9%	5.2%	23.8%	20.9%	5.8%	4.0	N/A
I am satisfied with the plan the University has in place to improve buildings on campus.	5.9%	24.6%	15.8%	14.0%	18.1%	18.1%	3.5%	4.1	-0.5

Darker boxes, bold text: Based on the distribution of scores, these represent the highest percentage. Typically, but not always, these boxes are an indicator of popular opinion regarding that specific item.

'16-'18 Change: This represents the difference between the scores from 2016 to 2018. Green and red boxes denote positive and negative changes, respectively. For the most part, a decline in the average is a bad thing, and an increase is a good thing. However, occasionally, there are questions phrased in such a way that a decline is a good thing, or an increase is a bad thing. For example, an increase in "I oftentimes find myself drowning in work" would thus be coded as red, or a decrease in "communication via e-mail is too burdensome" would be green. "N/A" is used to denote a new question in the 2018 survey.
